Introduction

Objective

This course gives an overview of the roots and development of the market economy in an international perspective, with an emphasis on the role played by companies. During the course the students will be encouraged to study the development of capitalism and the market economy in a critical perspective. By using historical examples, several alternatives to the market economy as a system of economic coordination will be presented. The course also gives an introduction to milestones of the history of economic thought and highlights some theories with different views on the market economy. The course will also address issues related to ethical and environmental challenges posed by the market economy
