Innledning

Employee commitment to an organization's goals is of vital importance for organizational success, making internal communication a key managerial issue. The distribution of information in an organization is a well-recognized component of internal communication; however, it is just the tip of the iceberg. The crucial importance of exchanging and discussing ideas in an honest, open, and effective communication climate - and that this climate surround all an organization's internal stakeholders is neither universally understood nor acknowledged. This course explains why establishing this climate is a prerequisite for employee commitment and ultimately for organizational success.

Læringsmål

Acquired knowledge

Students will command areas of organizational and communication theory specifically relevant to internal communication, for example:

- internal communication strategy,
- leadership and change communication,
- classic communication styles,
- dealing with different others (dialogue),
- ethical communication as a key to good leadership, and
- specific channels possible and desirable for internal communication.

Acquired skills

Upon completion of this course, students should be able to

- use specific communication models and tools to reflect upon and improve their own communication practices.
- clearly and convincingly present ideas to groups.
- lead group discussions.
- participate successfully in difficult conversations (dialogue).

Reflection

Our students will understand the crucial role internal communication plays in empowering an organization's internal stakeholder groups. In addition, they will realize that it is their responsibility as communication officers to have the knowledge and skills necessary to create the honest and open communication climate essential for effective organizational communication.

Forkunnskaper

Students must have taken PRK 3406 Introduction to Public Relations or a similar course. They must have a command of basic PR theory and concepts such as organizational structure and culture, identity, image, issues management, environmental scanning, etc.
